ALLY WEALTH

A+ Content Module Planner

AMAZON • AUTHOR RESOURCE LIBRARY

A planning workbook for mapping product-page visual modules to reader questions, book themes and accurate supporting information.

GET SEEN. GROW YOUR INFLUENCE. BUILD YOUR LEGACY.

How to use this resource

This guide is designed as a practical working document. Read it in sequence or move to the section that addresses your immediate need. Use the prompts to record decisions, assign actions and identify questions that require further research.

A note on platform guidance

Retailer features, metadata options, community rules and promotional policies can change. Verify current requirements with the relevant platform before making changes or launching a campaign. This guide is educational and does not guarantee rankings, reviews, sales or other outcomes.

Your working principles

Be accurate. Put reader relevance before vanity metrics. Respect platform rules and community boundaries. Keep records of decisions. Measure what matters to your goals.

Contents

01. What A+ Content can do

02. Start with reader questions

03. Clarify the book promise

04. Visual hierarchy

05. Module planning overview

06. Book-at-a-glance panel

07. Author introduction panel

08. Series overview panel

09. Comparison chart accuracy

10. Theme and trope panel

11. Inside-the-book panel

12. World or setting panel

13. Nonfiction benefit panel

14. Audience fit panel

15. Quote and endorsement checks

16. Image selection

17. Alt text and readability

18. Brand consistency

19. Mobile-first review

20. Policy and eligibility checks

21. Asset production brief

22. Module sequence map

23. Quality assurance checklist

24. Revision plan

Section 01

What A+ Content can do

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about what a+ content can do. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 02

Start with reader questions

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about start with reader questions. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 03

Clarify the book promise

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about clarify the book promise. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

- Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.
- Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.
- Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.
- Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.
- Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 04

Visual hierarchy

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about visual hierarchy. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 05

Module planning overview

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about module planning overview. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 06

Book-at-a-glance panel

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about book-at-a-glance panel. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 07

Author introduction panel

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about author introduction panel. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 08

Series overview panel

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about series overview panel. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 09

Comparison chart accuracy

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about comparison chart accuracy. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

- Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.
- Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.
- Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.
- Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.
- Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 10

Theme and trope panel

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about theme and trope panel. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 11

Inside-the-book panel

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about inside-the-book panel. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 12

World or setting panel

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about world or setting panel. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 13

Nonfiction benefit panel

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about nonfiction benefit panel. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

- Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.
- Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.
- Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.
- Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.
- Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 14

Audience fit panel

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about audience fit panel. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 15

Quote and endorsement checks

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about quote and endorsement checks. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

- Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.
- Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.
- Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.
- Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.
- Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 16

Image selection

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about image selection. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 17

Alt text and readability

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about alt text and readability. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 18

Brand consistency

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about brand consistency. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 19

Mobile-first review

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about mobile-first review. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 20

Policy and eligibility checks

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about policy and eligibility checks. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 21

Asset production brief

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about asset production brief. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 22

Module sequence map

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about module sequence map. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 23

Quality assurance checklist

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about quality assurance checklist. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 24

Revision plan

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about revision plan. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Working worksheet

Use this page to turn the guide into an action plan. Keep the scope realistic and prioritise the work that most directly supports the reader experience.

Area	Your decision / notes
Current position
Priority improvement
Evidence to collect
Action owner
Target date
How success will be reviewed

Your next 30 days

Choose a small number of actions you can complete consistently. Avoid changing multiple variables at once when you need to understand what made a difference.

Week 1: Review and research

_____

_____

_____

Week 2: Make the priority improvements

_____

_____

_____

Week 3: Publish, test or implement

_____

_____

_____

Week 4: Review evidence and decide what comes next

_____

_____

_____

Further notes and questions