ALLY WEALTH

The Amazon Listing Audit Checklist

AMAZON • AUTHOR RESOURCE LIBRARY

A structured 22-point review of the elements that shape a book detail page: metadata, description, categories, keywords, cover presentation, sample experience and reader confidence.

GET SEEN. GROW YOUR INFLUENCE. BUILD YOUR LEGACY.

How to use this resource

This guide is designed as a practical working document. Read it in sequence or move to the section that addresses your immediate need. Use the prompts to record decisions, assign actions and identify questions that require further research.

A note on platform guidance

Retailer features, metadata options, community rules and promotional policies can change. Verify current requirements with the relevant platform before making changes or launching a campaign. This guide is educational and does not guarantee rankings, reviews, sales or other outcomes.

Your working principles

Be accurate. Put reader relevance before vanity metrics. Respect platform rules and community boundaries. Keep records of decisions. Measure what matters to your goals.

Contents

01. Before you audit

02. The reader's first impression

03. Title and subtitle

04. Cover and thumbnail test

05. Book description structure

06. Opening hook

07. Genre and audience signals

08. Author name and series data

09. Edition and format checks

10. Editorial reviews and endorsements

11. A+ Content readiness

12. Category relevance

13. Keyword field preparation

14. Search phrase mapping

15. Competing title review

16. Price and format context

17. Look Inside experience

18. Mobile page review

19. Accessibility and readability

20. Trust and accuracy checks

21. Conversion friction

22. Audit scoring sheet

23. Priority repair plan

24. Recheck and maintenance

Section 01

Before you audit

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about before you audit. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 02

The reader's first impression

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about the reader's first impression. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 03

Title and subtitle

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about title and subtitle. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 04

Cover and thumbnail test

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about cover and thumbnail test. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 05

Book description structure

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about book description structure. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 06

Opening hook

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about opening hook. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 07

Genre and audience signals

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about genre and audience signals. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 08

Author name and series data

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about author name and series data. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

- Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.
- Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.
- Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.
- Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.
- Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 09

Edition and format checks

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about edition and format checks. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 10

Editorial reviews and endorsements

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about editorial reviews and endorsements. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 11

A+ Content readiness

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about a+ content readiness. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 12

Category relevance

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about category relevance. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

- Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.
- Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.
- Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.
- Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.
- Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 13

Keyword field preparation

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about keyword field preparation. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 14

Search phrase mapping

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about search phrase mapping. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 15

Competing title review

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about competing title review. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

- Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.
- Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.
- Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.
- Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.
- Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 16

Price and format context

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about price and format context. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 17

Look Inside experience

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about look inside experience. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 18

Mobile page review

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about mobile page review. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 19

Accessibility and readability

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about accessibility and readability. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 20

Trust and accuracy checks

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about trust and accuracy checks. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 21

Conversion friction

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about conversion friction. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 22

Audit scoring sheet

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about audit scoring sheet. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 23

Priority repair plan

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about priority repair plan. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

• Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.

• Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.

• Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.

• Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.

• Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Section 24

Recheck and maintenance

This section helps you make a clear, reader-centred decision about recheck and maintenance. Start by recording what is true about your book, audience and current position. Then separate evidence from assumptions before choosing an action.

What to consider

Begin with the reader's perspective. Ask what a prospective reader needs to understand, what information would help them decide, and whether the material you present is accurate and consistent. Review the surrounding context rather than treating one marketing element in isolation.

Practical sequence

- Write down the current situation and the outcome you want to improve.
- Gather the relevant book details, platform information and examples.
- Check whether each choice is accurate, appropriate and useful to the intended reader.
- Choose one manageable improvement and record who will complete it and when.
- Review the result using a meaningful signal, then document what you learned.

Working questions

What evidence supports this decision? What might confuse or discourage the reader? Which detail needs verification? What is the smallest useful next step?

Your notes

_____

_____

_____

_____

Working worksheet

Use this page to turn the guide into an action plan. Keep the scope realistic and prioritise the work that most directly supports the reader experience.

Area	Your decision / notes
Current position
Priority improvement
Evidence to collect
Action owner
Target date
How success will be reviewed

Your next 30 days

Choose a small number of actions you can complete consistently. Avoid changing multiple variables at once when you need to understand what made a difference.

Week 1: Review and research

_____

_____

_____

Week 2: Make the priority improvements

_____

_____

_____

Week 3: Publish, test or implement

_____

_____

_____

Week 4: Review evidence and decide what comes next

_____

_____

_____

Further notes and questions